EARTHQUAKE AT ELKO THIS WEEK STOPPED SNOW STORM

Elko was visited by another tremor Wednesday morning at about 11:30. The shock was quite severe, shaking books from their shelves, causing buildings to tremble, and giving the court house folks quite a scare through the rocking of the pillars supporting the front of the building. The shock lasted about four seconds and was accompanied by the usual roaring noise. A peculiar thing was noticed in the fact that shortly before the quake a promising snow storm had started. Immediately following the occurrence the sky cleared and the weather has been ideal ever since. —[Elko Independent.]

ACID TEST OF POLITENESS

Small Girl's Act Might Almost Be Said to Come Under the Head of Heroism.

Frances was spending the day with her friend, Jane Watkins. She had taken one spoonful of the soup, says Harper's Magazine, when something floating on top caught her eye. Was it black pepper or was it a black ant? What should she do with it?

At that moment Frances' close scrutiny of her soup attracted the attention of Jane. In a stage whisper, plainly heard round the table, came Jane's "Oh, mother! There's an ant in Frances' soup!"

That was it, an ant. Of course Mrs. Watkins would take the soup away. How relieved Frances was!

"The very idea! An ant in her soup! I am surprised at you, Jane! It is pepper!" said Mrs. Watkins severely, and she looked reproachfully at both girls. Through Frances' mind flashed all the instructions on politeness she had ever heard; never contradict your elders; in all circumstances, be polite; table manners show one's breeding. What must she do? "Never contradict your elders!" She spoke up at once, trying her best to make her tone positive:

"Oh, yes! I think it is pepper."

"Of course it is," said Mrs. Watkins. Frances stirred her soup, hoping Jane's attention would be called away, that she might catch the swimmer and transfer it to the dinner plate. But there was no such luck. Up came the speck more like an ant than ever. Pepper was one speck; here were two specks close together. It was an ant, and Jane, persistency itself, leaned over for one more look, and said:

"It is an ant."
Frances glanced hopefully at the head of the table; but Mrs. Watkins had not changed her opinion; it was pepper. "Be polite," ran through her brain again, and, taking up the spoonful of soup upon which that suspicious double speck floated, Frances settled the question forever before saying, faintly:

"It was pepper. I know by the taste."

TYPICAL OF GOLDEN WEST

Little Montana Town of Willow Creek Has Something of Which East Cannot Boast.

Willow Creek is the ordinary name of an ordinary small town in Montana. Bear Creek, Roundup and Sioux Pass have more of the Western flavor, but Willow Creek is a typical little Western town in spite of its name. It is so in the midst of a vast tract of clean prairie land that it cannot be measured by the yard-wide rule of cities. In the distance towering mountains keep a paternal watch over it.

Even when the early morning mists hide the mountains and prairies, Willow Creek stands out spunkily—a definite spot on the landscape. The station near the railroad tracks is very small, quite square and very red. Luxuriant groves of trees fill the spaces between the pretty little white, frame houses. A road that looks clean-swept shows to all comers a straight and narrow way ranchward. Several large willows dip their fingers in the current of the little creek that runs behind the white houses.

As the train from the west stops a few minutes at Willow Creek, in the early dawn, a middle-aged man swings off and starts down the road at a good pace. One would know him anywhere for a mining man.

The metropolitan doing the transcontinental trip may smile at little Willow Creek from his comfortable Pullman, but there is one thing here of which the East cannot boast—elbow room. The great reaches of space are something unknown and bewildering to the Eastern strap-hanger and cliff-dweller. As the mining man swaggers down the road toward his great outdoors, there is something about him which spells domain.

Beethoven's Courage.

Ludwig von Beethoven, the eminent composer pianist who was born at Bonn, Austria, in 1770, was perhaps one of the greatest examples of patience ever known. At the age of thirty he was afflicted with deafness, yet struggled on, completing masterpieces and living exclusively in his art. "Until a Raphael be struck with blindness in the full freshness of his powers, Beethoven is without a compeer in the history of all ages, either in misery or in bliss." So said his dearest friend, who knew him during his years of affliction and also success, the latter of which came to him mostly in Austria's capital.

Humorous Lapses.

Not every commencement speaker has said precisely what he wished to say to the young people before him. One was tripped by a most unhappy lapsus lingue at a young ladies' seminary.

He meant to say: "But I have talked too long, and I do not wish to speak to weary benches." Instead of which he said "beery benches." Thereby reminding us of Tutor Spooner of Oxford, who thus addressed a meeting of farmers: "It is gratifying to me to behold as many tons of soil."

But a university lecturer lately matched these infelicities when he said: "I'm not going to talk very long, but if you get what I'm going to say in your heads you'll have the whole thing in a nutshell."

There's many a true word spoken in jest.
